

December 2012

Dear Friends,

It's that time of year again and I have been waiting for months to update you on my family. It's really been a great year. I am sure you already know that my family is in the top .01% of families around the world regarding health, prosperity, good looks, charisma and humility. But what you don't know are the specifics of this last year.

Early in the year Jace published his first book which has become an overnight sensation. It hit the New York Times best sellers list early on and has stayed at the top of Amazon's charts all year long. Hermeneutics is now a household term. With the success of the book has come great success at the church too. In this one year, the church has more than quadrupled in size and three of the more liberal churches have actually had to shut down. And with that success, we actually asked our congregation to give their money to some other good cause for November and December; we just had more than enough. Jace is currently working on four more book deals and has taken the family overseas six different times for preaching and teaching gigs and in October we took a trip into outer space.

Jaclynnette has done pretty well too. In addition to supporting her phenomenal success of a husband, she was asked to lead the Maryland Branch of the Home School Co-op and is teaching regularly across the country. Her modeling career has really taken off this past year as well. We expect her to move into international markets next year. She is also a viral sensation eclipsing Beth Moore when it comes to sales. her out online at <http://www.areasreallyfallingforthis.com>. In November she presented a viable alternative cancer medicine to the National Institutes of Health and the feedback so far has been positive. I should give some of the credit to Kadin for this as it started as his science experiment in our basement lab. If this goes where everyone thinks it is going, he may be nominated for a second Nobel peace prize.

Speaking of Kadin, wow! When he isn't working in his lab he is just like most kids. He loves legos and Starwars. With time off school this summer, he built a solar powered lego landspeeder. It works great and I use it every day to go to work. I don't trust it to go to SC to see the parents, but he should have time to make some much needed tweaks next summer. He is also speaking quite a lot in the area of solar and nuclear energy.

Not actual landspeeder as the patent is not yet worked out and we don't want anyone stealing the idea

Rhyston is eleven and led the varsity teams in basketball, baseball and soccer. DC United has spoken to him about playing for them but he wants to finish this final year of college first. But he really is a regular kind of guy. He has a special love for Marvel Comics and that made him a sucker for all the super hero movies this last year. Not only is he a treasure-trove of trivial information about all things Stan Lee, he has also had some considerable success in the basement lab. The laundry room has been converted into a gamma particle infusion center. Last year this caused some problems, but this past year he has perfected the process by channeling gamma particles through venomous spiders. The result has been a perfectly controlled metamorphosis and our very own super-hero. Rhyston keeps strange hours now, fighting crime throughout Poolesville and the gangster-ridden Germantown. He also teaches a class on criminology at the University of MD. He is eleven but it probably goes without saying that he has the maturity of a 13 year old at least.

Davin, at seven, is not nearly as accomplished in science although we haven't given up all hope. He does have what he calls a "Mark 12 iron man" prototype although test flights are not what we expected. But in truth, this is not where his heart is. What he likes: dancing. This past year he went on tour with Toby Mac as a back-up dancer and this next year he will play the lead in the Broadway musical "Magic Mike." This will surely be difficult with his 8:30 bedtime but we will make it work.

You can see Davin in the background if you squint just right

If you would pray for our next year please. In addition to some of the things mentioned above, we will be presenting our recently written manifesto on violence before the UN, the NRA and the National Mennonite Association of Churches. All have reacted favorably to the initial arguments. We will also be on James Dobson's "Family Talk" trying to explain to the plebian masses how they can have a family like ours.

We hope your last year has been similarly successful and blessed. If you are in town, please call first. We only have so much time for lesser families like yours and we have to guard it well.
